

UPPER MIDWEST ENDURANCE AND COMPETITIVE RIDES ASSOCIATION

The Little Things

One of my favorite things about distance riding is the training. It gets me out of the house, away from my job and I focus on moments and not the list of to-dos that is never ending in my life lately. I'm lucky that my daughter is home from college for a couple months and we rode last weekend. We saw an enormous hawk near a large wetland. My husband was not with us, so I could not identify the type. Turkeys are becoming a regular sighting on this particular loop as well as bald eagles. The columbine are blooming up here as are the lupine.

I did a short loop in a small park near my home midweek. I think I saw my first ever midwest osprey near a nest box that an eagle scout erected about 8 years ago that other birds seem to use for perches and that's about it. There are two swan pairs on a nearby pothole.

I love to see the goings on of the world around me. My grandma took us for walks in the woods (probably to wear us kids out) and my conditioning rides are just that except that at a faster pace. She would point out flowers and birds and things on trees. We'd look for unique rocks and stones and talk about what it must have been like before our German ancestors disrupted the life of the Native Americans living in the area.

These conditioning rides also give us a chance to see little things in our horses without the distraction of the goal of finishing a ride at a decent pace. We can go fast, we can go slow, we can we can work on keeping our horse straight or curving around our inside leg. We can enjoy the day and the sights around us.

I hope your ride season is a blessing this year and you find enjoyment in the little things,

Theresa Meyer
UMECRA President

Shore to Shore is ON!!!!

A few changes – it's one ride, not 3, but still 7 days and the trails are the same! Check out the new ride flyer on the UMECRA webpage!!!

(potentially) a poorer quality of life for the horses," Gimenez said. "In other words, you're damned if you do and damned if you don't."

Instead, Gimenez recommends owners either create an equine evacuation plan in case of dangerous weather or shelter the animals in place on their own properties. The former requires removing horses from at risk areas before a storm arrives and transporting them to a previously determined location, while the latter requires owners to prepare their properties so animals can weather storms as safely as possible.

Gimenez said that with minor retrofitting, such as installing hurricane clips and reinforcing support beams and tie-ins, most equine facilities can survive minor to mid-range tornadoes. Owners who stable their horses during a storm should remove from the barn any items or implements that might become projectiles.

If a barn collapse is likely, Gimenez advises that owners with sufficient space turn their horses out in advance of a storm. She also recommends owners remove any items or debris from pastures that could injure nearby animals.

Meanwhile, Sally Vivrette, DVM, PhD, Dipl. ACVIM, a veterinarian from North Carolina's Triangle Equine who attended to horses after a tornado swept through Lee County, N.C., in 2011, advises that horses pastured during a tornado should wear fly masks to avoid eye injury. She also recommends owners paint their phone numbers on their horses' bodies or braid a note containing their contact information into their horses' manes. "That way people will know who to call (if the storm drives the animal from its pasture)," Vivrette said.

Finally, Gimenez reminds horse owners that protecting human life should be a priority when strong storms are predicted. She recommends establishing a tornado room in the center of the barn to accommodate people who might be trapped there when the storm strikes. She also recommends that owners become familiar with basic first-aid techniques to apply in the storm's aftermath if necessary.

"Remember: In a disaster like this, it's people first," Gimenez said.

What's My Rider Number?

In order to improve tracking of rider (and horse) points and mileage, numbers have been assigned to all UMECRA members and their horses. Check out your member numbers below. Need to know your horse's UMECRA number? If your horse has an AERC number, the UMECRA horse number is the same. Don't have an AERC number? Then let Jill Feller, Nicole Mauser-Storer or Robin Schadt know and they will take care of you! Need to check your UMECRA horse number? Go to www.UMECRA.com !!
