UPPER MIDWEST ENDURANCE AND COMPETITIVE RIDES ASSOCIATION

Looking for new places to ride in your area and beyond?

Check out <http://trailmeister.com/>

Lots of information there on trails and all things trails! Search by city, state, even zip codes! You can even add trails that you know about.

A new ride season has begun and I hope everyone is ready to go! It is always exciting to start a new season as we get to meet new members, set new goals for ourselves or our equine partners, and of course catch up with old friends.

I hope everyone will share their excitement and thanks with all of our Ride Managers too. They certainly appreciate the enthusiasm and the acknowledgement of the work they do so that we can enjoy our sport. A simple THANK YOU goes a long way with RM's and all their volunteers.

Ride safe and smart this year. I hope it is one of the best seasons for you and your horse. Enjoy the ride!

Jon Wagner
UMECRA President

Aflatoxins in Horse Feed

Aflatoxins are a group of chemically related mycotoxins that some common molds produce as a byproduct.

Initially discovered in the 1960s, the biggest concern associated with aflatoxins in horse feed is that they can lead to liver damage; this occurs because the liver removes the toxins from the blood after the intestinal tract absorbs them. In horses, signs of chronic liver damage can include inappetence, depression, fever, tremor, ataxia (incoordination), and cough. Acute poisoning can also occur, especially in younger, more vulnerable animals, resulting in generalized hemorrhage, bloody diarrhea, and death.

Aflatoxins and other mycotoxins are potential contaminants of several feed ingredients, particularly corn. They're most prevalent when plants are stressed and climate conditions are favorable, such as during drought or resulting from insect damage.

Fumonisin (another type of mycotoxin), for example, infects corn kernels and causes moldy corn poisoning or disease in horses. Affected horses display neurologic issues, including incoordination due to damage to the brain's white matter. Fumonisin-contaminated corn is most common in states with warm, humid climates. Unfortunately, while some horses might not consume feed contaminated with some toxins due to its unpalatable nature, fumonisin doesn't reduce corn's palatability. Most commonly, fumonisin is found in corn screenings (corn kernels—broken, ground, or fractured—and other cleaning process byproducts); for this reason the FDA advises against feeding horses corn screenings. Low levels of these aflatoxins in horse feed are common and appear to cause few issues, so avoiding them completely is likely unrealistic. However, because their negative effects can develop as animals consume higher concentrations, there are guidelines on allowable limits in feed fed to horses and other livestock. The FDA recommends corn and corn byproducts contain less than 5 parts per million (ppm) of fumonisins and that they shouldn't make up more than 20% of the whole ration's dry weight. The FDA updated its aflatoxin guidelines in March 2019, and the allowable limit in grains, ingredients, and feeds is 20 ppb for horses.

Controlling Aflatoxin Levels

Feed companies should test raw ingredients at risk of containing mycotoxins before railcars and trucks are unloaded at feed mills. Not only are they testing the ingredients to ensure they're well below the FDA's action levels but that they also meet the company's own quality criteria, which are lower than FDA requirements. Feed that fails feed company testing is refused and not unloaded. A company that produces feeds for different, less-aflatoxin-sensitive species might accept this refused grain.

Protecting Horses

Scientific literature offers limited information about aflatoxin exposure and metabolism and how they impact horses. This doesn't mean equine aflatoxin poisoning is rare but rather that we don't always identify it when horses display nonspecific clinical signs.

Some believe there's a link between equine respiratory disease and inhaled mycotoxins, so soaking or steaming hay could help reduce mold exposure risk (these molds occur even in the cleanest forages). Molds found in forage tend to be slightly different than those detected in grains, with a greater prevalence of Aspergillus and Penicillium in forages. However, these molds still produce aflatoxins and fumonisin toxins, among others.

You can't tell whether feed is contaminated by mycotoxins just by looking at it; even feeds that don't appear obviously moldy can have high toxin levels. If you see your horse exhibiting clinical signs that might be linked to mycotoxin poisoning, call your veterinarian immediately; he or she will conduct bloodwork to assess your horse's liver health. And, if you feed grain, ask the product manufacturer what steps they take to ensure feeds aren't contaminated with potentially unsafe levels of mycotoxins.

Some products designed to bind mycotoxins when administered to horses are available on the market. These include clays, such as sodium aluminosilicate, and the cell walls of hydrolyzed yeast. In numerous research trials in other species, scientists have shown these ingredients bind mycotoxins and remove them from the digestive tract before they can be absorbed in the bloodstream. This renders them harmless. These ingredients also have other benefits; hydrolyzed yeast cell walls, for instance, have prebiotic effects.

Finally, store your feeds carefully to help reduce the chance of mold development. Always clean out feed bins between refilling them with new bags, and avoid plastic storage containers if you live in a humid climate.

The Bottom Line

By selecting feeds from companies with stringent quality control measures and using careful feeding and storage practices, you can help protect your horse from the potential risks associated with mycotoxin exposure.

DRAW Clinic – April 7th

Minnesota Clinic – April 18th

Minnesota Mock Ride – May 10-11

Coon Rock Mock Ride – April 28th

UMECRA Clinics

What a year for great clinics within UMECRA! It's incredible how much interest there is in this sport that we love! Now that we have piqued their interest – what can we do to help them grow in the sport? Here are a few ideas when you see a new face at the rides...

1. See a new face – reach out and say hi!
2. Ask if they are new to the sport
3. Ask if they have any questions
4. Encourage them when they start their ride
5. Congratulate them when they complete
6. Commiserate with them if they don't finish
7. Invite them to join you at the pot luck
8. Introduce them to other riders
9. Help them to feel welcome!

Are you a new rider? What can you do to get to know more people? Here are a few ideas for you!

1. Let the Ride Manager know you are new to the sport.
2. Volunteer! Help scribe, make coffee, help feed the vets
3. When people are done with their rides and ready to relax, ask them about their ride, what event they competed in, ask them about their horse, start a conversation!
