The Lost Art of the Stethoscope?

It has come to my attention that we, as endurance riders, have lost the art of using a stethoscope. (This really became apparent at Colorama when all the hand held monitors had dead batteries.) The stethoscope is a cornerstone to our sport and the principle behind it is fundamental to the knowledge base we should all share. Thank goodness we have not all had the opportunity to examine a crashing horse but it would be in everyone's interest to examine their horse throughout a race to evaluate vital signs.

We, as veterinarians, are trusted to identify abnormalities in competing horses during an endurance event but as a rider we should all take an interest in the horse's well-being. The horse's pulse is not just a number to obtain so a rider may pass parameters to enter their hold but rather an important criterion upon which to judge an animal's metabolic condition. A stethoscope does not only give you a quantity but a quality reading.

The pulse is easily heard behind the horse's elbow and should consist of a steady, two-beat rhythm. Extra beats, irregular rhythms, and a pulse that speeds up and slows down may indicate metabolic abnormalities that need to be addressed. Cardiac arrhythmias are not identified by heart monitors. Heart monitors may also fail when needed most in the pulse box but a rider's ears are attuned to what matters most – the horse's health. Also, gastrointestinal motility should be evaluated by the rider throughout the event.

Gut sounds are evaluated in both the upper and lower areas of the horse's flanks. Normal and progressive gut motility is easily and quickly heard when the stethoscope is placed in the flank region. Minimal or absent motility throughout the abdomen should be a red flag to the rider that the horse may be being overused for its condition or impending a metabolic condition. If a veterinarian requests a recheck of the horse for either metabolics or locomotion, there is a valid reason for this re-examination and perhaps the rider should also take an interest to learn about the horse's condition. So take this opportunity to learn both at home and during an event how to be a more informed competitor. Stethoscopes can be purchased at many locations such as an endurance tack shop or allheart.com.

Respectfully Submitted,

Dr. Cindy Schlund

Triple Crown Award

End of season is fast approaching, and I know that everyone is picking and choosing their rides according to how they currently stand in the points. There is one more AHDRA ride on the program, Big River, AHDRA III in Keithsburg, Illinois on Oct 30th/31st. The rules state that a horse/ride team must complete at least one event in 3 out of the 4 AHDRA rides. Two teams have already attended three AHDRA rides, and several more have attended two with a possibility of a third. Remember, if a team competes in all four AHDRA rides, the lowest scoring ride is dropped from the total. Here are the top ten teams:

Laura Husser/CDWD Margarita	22/12/23	57 points
(has fulfilled the 3 ride requirement)
Bonnie Mielke/Chariotsoffire	11/13.2/21	45.2 points
(has fulfilled the 3 ride requirement)
Marty Power/Sa Te Jat	12/18	30 points
Tim Casserly/team driver
Auren Harley Dvdsn & Auren Bachlava	13.2/16.5	29.7 points
Olivia Rudolphi/Wineglass Lambrusco	10/16	26 points
Karen Sylvara/Spot Me Wild	8/16	24 points
Ellen Rapp/Guesswhozgotitall)	7.2/11	18.2 points
Robin Schadt/Sassy Aspen	10/8	18 points
Jeanne Crispin/Tioga Peak	11/6	17 points
Chris Power/Wineglass Debonair	8/8	16 points

As I look over the list of “who has played the game”, I am amazed by the variety of horses that have made the Top Ten. There are three Shagya, a pair of driving horses, and three Appaloosas/App crosses. And look at the human participants: several people who are new to the sport; a founding father (mother?); a gal heading to the WEG Endurance Race; and a couple of riders who have returned to our sport after a absence of several years. Regardless of who wins that wonderful portrait and floating frame donated by Timeless Equine Photography, the competition has been fun to watch.

Poisonous Plant Risk Increases as Pasture Grass Goes Dormant

by: Jodi DeLong

October 10 2008, Article # 12869

www.thehorse.com

As autumn rolls around, pastures become depleted as grass and plant growth slows prior to going dormant for winter. So, it's not surprising that this time of year can also bring an increase in reports of horses becoming ill from eating something they shouldn't have.

Karyn Bischoff, DVM, MS, Dipl. ABVT, a diagnostic toxicologist at Cornell University's New York State Animal Health Diagnostic Center, said it does appear there are more suspected cases of poison plant ingestion in late summer and autumn, but also says these are difficult to diagnose.

"Plant ingestions over time can cause chronic disease, so by the time the horse is noticeably sick, the plant is gone because it was all eaten, it's out of season, or the horses were moved to another stable or pasture after exposure," Bischoff explained.

She added that plant toxins can be difficult to find in the body as the particular toxin are sometimes not known, there are no good tests for it, or the toxin has metabolized and gone before the horse presents clinical signs of serious illness.

Happily, most toxic plants are not very palatable, and horses tend to avoid them.

Jack van Roestel, MSc, a longtime horse owner and forage consultant with AgraPoint in Kentville, Nova Scotia, stressed that prevention of poisoning begins with good pasture management.

"When it comes to grazing, it's good to have several paddocks that are rotationally grazed, with proper entrance and exit heights, rest periods, stocking numbers, and applied fertility," van Roestel said. "By having a fairly competitive grass stand, weed problems will be reduced."

Bischoff agreed that good pasture management goes a long way in preventing poisoning, but also stressed that horse owners should contact their veterinarian whenever they have concerns about health issues. "If they can't answer your questions right away, they are usually going to know the best places to find trustworthy information for you," she said.
